Dear People of God,

Christmas afternoon - is it all over? Some say it is. If you are willing to take a ride around in your car, you will even find Christmas trees with bits of tinsel still attached to them, thrown on their sides on the curb. The wrappings have been stuffed in garbage bags and tied up for the trash pick up. A few folks were out in the late afternoon taking down the lights. Some stores already have set up their post-Christmas sales. In fact, I heard an ad on television talking about programing for the pre-Valentine season - two full weeks of love stories!!

Well, I will admit that Christmas day has come and is quickly going. The exciting moment of tearing the wrappings off of gifts to reveal a new, unwrinkled, unworn shirt, or an unscratched, unbroken toy, or the latest electronic gadget is past. But the excitement is still here, and, for some of us, our natural desire is to prolong it for as long as possible. The gifts were given, not just for the moment of joy in their opening but to give the longer, fuller joy of their good use, and each time we use them, we will think of those who gave them to us. I suspect that it may warm the hearts of some of us for a while longer.

The same applies to the gift of the birth of Jesus. The gift of God to humanity at Christmas is not just the joy of the moment of Christmas day, but the gift of God's presence with each of us and with all of us for all time. The season after Christmas is our time to step back from the celebration and explore the depth of what has happened. On the day after Christmas, we can take up our presents one by one and appreciate the beauty and purpose of each. We can also take up the opportunity to ponder the beauty, complexity, and power of the Incarnation of God in our human form. This revelation is not an aloof appearance of a transcendent and impersonal deity, but an in-the-flesh- person who dwelt among us and calls us each by name to know God, receive God, and live in the light of God.

In our contemplation of the birth of Jesus, we see God's glory and share in the very life of God. We are challenged to become part of a dialogue and be a partner in a covenant. Jesus moves into the center of our beings and brings us to the point where our hearts are ready to receive the gift of hope that God gives. We ask God to help us be susceptible to his message and accept his call to faith, hope and love.

May God be with you and bless+ you in the coming year!

Much love,
Sandy (Mother C)
